

In this talk I will explain how to construct a topological space (the ribbon graph complex) which is used to study the geometry of Riemann surfaces. The ribbon graph complex itself has a rich geometric structure; in particular it is an example of a symplectic manifold. I will show how to calculate the symplectic volume of this space by cutting graphs into simpler pieces. To conclude my talk I will discuss a few interesting applications of this result.